ABSTRACT

The guide cross references publications of the Special Education Curriculum Development Center (SECDC) prepared for inservice training programs of teachers of the mentally retarded in Iowa. It is intended to assist teachers in locating materials in SECDC documents that pertain to teaching a particular concept. Materials, divided into 20 major concept content areas, are grouped into three major divisions: social/emotional content areas, skill development content areas, and practical arts content areas. Under each concept are listed the page numbers of sections or units within SECDC documents which relate to the teaching of that concept. (KW)

The Special Education Curriculum Development Center has as its main objective the operation of a statewide in-service training program for teachers of the mentally retarded. Twenty special class teachers from different geographic areas of Iowa serve as consulting teachers. They attend training sessions in Des Moines and then return to their home area to conduct field sessions. All materials prepared for SECDC are intended for dissemination through the field sessions conducted by the consulting teachers. These materials are prepared by the SECDC staff in response to the suggestions of special class teachers. Persons who use SECDC materials but do not attend the field sessions should keep in mind that the purpose of the material is to serve as a starting point for in-service training and that the publications themselves are not end products.

It should also be noted that any reference to commercially prepared materials by the Special Education Curriculum Development Center does not constitute a recommendation or endorsement for purchase. The consideration of such material is intended solely as a means of assisting teachers and administrators in the evaluation of materials.

INTRODUCTION

This booklet cross referencing the SECDC publications was written in response to numerous requests from the teachers using these materials in their classrooms. It is to be used as a guide to teachers for locating materials found in numerous SECDC documents that pertain to and are appropriate for teaching a particular concept.

The booklet categorizes SECDC materials into twenty major concept content areas. These content areas are grouped into three major divisions: social/emotional content areas, skill development content areas, and practical art content areas.

By checking the table of contents, the teacher can locate the major concept that she is teaching in her classroom at a particular time. When she turns to this page in her booklet she has a complete listing of all the SECDC documents and the particular topics or units within these documents that relate to this major concept. A column is provided where the teacher can make helpful comments or check off those topics that would be appropriate for her particular class. A blank page is inserted at the end of each major content area to allow the teacher to update her cross referencing as more SECDC documents are published. Documents that pertain to teaching techniques, methods and materials are listed on the last page of the major content area section.

It is hoped that this cross reference will provide the teacher with greater flexibility and more extensive use of her documents.

SUMMARY

As a result of compiling this cross reference, certain generalizations can be made about the SECDC documents published thus far. Content areas seem to stress social and emotional adjustment. This, we feel, is beneficial since home, school and post-school, adjustment is more difficult for the handicapped child and they need more help and guidance in this area than "normal" children.

The SECDC documents are weakest in specific skill content areas. This may indicate a priority for future documents or this area may be covered adequately in other materials and not be a need of Special Education teachers.

There also seems to be a lack in content readiness areas for very young children in both skill and social/emotional development. This could indicate a direction for future publications.

In general, all content areas are fairly well represented in the available SECDC documents. We hope that the teacher will check over this booklet and notify the SECDC staff regarding particular strengths, weaknesses, and possible content areas to explore in subsequent documents.
